Mr. Iida: The closing ceremony of the art festival starts at 10 o'clock. We can meet at the hotel entrance at 9:20. Is that okay for you?

Akihide: No problem. When does it finish? I would like to go see some of the artworks from other schools in the local museum after the ceremony.

Mr. Iida: It finishes around 12:15. If we went, we would not have time to eat lunch, as the art museum is sort of far from the festival and we need to make sure to still get to the airport at 15:00 for check in, for our flight at 16:00.

Akihide: I don't mind skipping lunch to go there. The artwork from the other schools from all over Japan might help inspire my future work.

Mr. Iida: _____

「より良いもの」を作り続ける努力を惜しまない人がある

Hello everyone.

I love ramen and I think many of you might like ramen too. Today, I want to talk about why ramen has become a “Japanese dish” and has even come to be (①) as a “national dish”.

Ramen has its roots in China, but the reason why it has become loved by many Japanese people is that it has taken inspiration from the traditional Chinese style and modified it for Japanese tastes. (②) types of ramen have been developed using different noodle sizes, shapes, ingredients and soup seasonings. Another reason why ramen is loved in Japan is that in 1958 the world’s first (③) noodle “Nissin Chicken Ramen” was released by Mr. Momofuku Ando, to great success, spreading all over Japan.

In 1992, a ramen chain restaurant in the Hokuriku region expanded overseas, but at first it simply did not have a good reputation because the ramen quality was not very good. In the 2000s, ramen craftsmen and food producers who worked in popular restaurants conducted thorough (④) in order to learn about the tastes of people in other countries. Based on the taste that many Japanese people like, they offered ramen that attracted people in other countries, and this was a big hit in many places. One American left a review, “A little expensive, but high quality and the taste is worth the price.”

I think the possibilities of Japanese ramen are endless. We must not forget that there are creators who spare no (⑤) to create better things now and in the past, and I learned again the importance of continuing to improve.

Everything is fancy but..

Jemie, Taiwan

A group of Taiwanese tourists went sightseeing together in Tokyo, as the Japanese government still does not welcome individual tourists from other countries. One day, we visited a big temple. It has flourished at the center of an old town. The temple is said to be the oldest one by local people in Tokyo. Everything is fancy, and we saw many young people with casual summer kimonos going down from the gate of the temple. There were many souvenir shops along the street, but everything seemed to be pricey. I guess you can say it's tourist pricing. Vending machines around the rest area were also a little expensive. We sat on a bench eating and drinking, but we could not find a trash box, only recycling bins, so we had to carry the food waste in our bags. When we got back to our hotel, we noticed our bags were now smelly from carrying food trash in our bags.

Avoid visiting old temples during the day time

Sosuke, Sapporo

I had a social gathering with other students from all over Japan, and I dropped by a huge temple on the way back to my hotel. Along the street near the temple, I bought some souvenirs for my friends. I did give up on the idea of buying good luck charms though, as they cost almost double the price compared to other souvenirs. Next to the temple building, there was a resting place. My advice however, is that you should avoid going to this place during the day time from July to August, as most of these seats will be occupied by old people. On the way back from the temple, I dropped by a famous sweets shop with a long history. I wanted to buy some bean pancakes, dorayaki, but they also cost more than 300 Japanese yen! Everything was expensive in Tokyo.
